Dr. J. Britt McCarley, Ph.D., is both Chief Historian (since 2006) and Director, TRADOC Military History and Heritage Program (since 2011) at HQ TRADOC, Fort Eustis, Virginia. After several years with the U.S. National Park Service, he has worked for the Army since 1988 and at HQ TRADOC since 1997. Dr. McCarley is a native of Atlanta, Georgia. He holds both the undergraduate degree (cum laude) and master’s degree in History from Georgia State University in Atlanta and the doctoral degree in United States History from Temple University in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania. His primary professional interests are in eighteenth and nineteenth century U.S. military history; the interpretation and management of historic sites; and the development of military history curriculum, especially ways to technologically enhance instruction. His publications include The Atlanta and Savannah Campaigns, 1864, U.S. Army Campaigns of the Civil War series, Washington, DC: U.S. Army Center of Military History, 2014; contributor to The Whirlwind War: The United States Army in Operations DESERT SHIELD and DESERT STORM, Washington, DC: U.S. Army Center of Military History, 1995; The Atlanta Campaign: A Civil War Driving Tour of Atlanta-Area Battlefields, Atlanta, GA: Cherokee Publishing, 1989; and “‘The Great Question of the Campaign Was One of Supplies’: A Reinterpretation of Sherman’s Generalship during the 1864 March to Atlanta in Light of the Logistic Strategy” in Edward G. Longacre and Theodore J. Zeman, eds., Beyond Combat: Essays in Military History in Honor of Russell F. Weigley, Philadelphia, PA: American Philosophical Society, 2007. He is working on an operational history of the “Kennesaw Phase” (7 June-9 July) of the 1864 Atlanta Campaign for the University of Oklahoma Press. Dr. McCarley and his wife have two grown children.
